Census Supervisor Samuel R. Hamilton, who is in charge of the census enumeration for the Twenty-first Congressional District, has made his apportionment of Centre County by districts which "The Republican" is glad to furnish its readers in this issue. For the last two months there has been considerable interest throughout the county to know how the several districts would be arranged. "The Republican" is the first newspaper in Centre County to publish this information.

As is shown by the following apportionment Centre County is divided into thirty-nine districts, so that there will be that number of enumerators appointed for this county alone. Three enumerators will be appointed for Bellefonte, or one for each of the three wards. The apportionment of the county, as arranged by Mr. Hamilton, is as follows:

DIED IN HOSPITAL

Sad Death of Miss Bertha Sourbeck, at Philadelphia.

Especially sad was the death at 6:30 o'clock Sunday evening last, of Miss Bertha Sourbeck, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. John Sourbeck, in the University Hospital, at Philadelphia. So few of her friends were even aware that she had been taken to the city for medical treatment that the announcement of her sudden death came as a shock to the entire community.

Accompanied by her mother, Miss Sourbeck went to Philadelphia on Friday of last week. She had been in ill health for about two months and it was decided to have her enter the University Hospital for examination and treatment.

After the hospital physicians had made an examination they decided to operate on Miss Sourbeck. Her condition was such that she failed to rally and her death followed on Sunday evening. The body was brought to Bellefonte on Monday and interment made today with services at St. John's Catholic Church.

Miss Sourbeck was an estimable young woman wtih a host of friends who mourn her sad death. She was 32 years of age.

MRS. DANIEL SHONTZ.

Not long since we noted the golden wedding anniversary of Daniel and Rachael Shontz, among our oldest and most highly esteemed citizens. Now it becomes our sad duty to chronicle the death of the latter, which occurred Thursday evening, January 20, 1910, at 7:20 o'clock at the family residence on North Seventh street. She had been in poor health for a couple of years, but was confined to her bed for only a week. Death resulted from neuralgia and heart trouble.

The deceased, whose maiden name was Rachel Baker, was born in Trough Creek Valley, Huntingdon county, on May 15, 1883, making her age 76 years, 8 months and 5 days. She was married to Daniel Shontz at the home of her parents on August 16, 1849. As a result of this union ten children were born, eight of whom, with the husband and father, survive, viz: Mrs. John Ashcroft, Elpaso, Tex.; John B., this city; Mrs. James Ginnick, Faulkner's Addition; Mrs. Boney Gardner and Alfred E., Blue Ball; Harry, Philadelphia; Mrs. Harry Martin, Johnstown, and Mrs. Charles Simler, this city. One brother and one sister also survive: Alfred Baker, of Fulton county, and Mrs. T. Houck, of Marklesburg, Huntingdon county.

For nearly fifty years the deceased had been a devoted member of the Baptist church, and lived a consistent Christian life, enabling her to pass peacefully to her rest with strong hope of a blissful immortality. She was a good, devoted wife, an affectionate mother, a kind neighbor and beloved by a large circle of friends who will deeply mourn her death. —Philipsburg Journal.

MRS. AMANDA KEPHART.

It is but a few weeks since the many friends of the Caleb Kephart family, of Fillmore, were shocked to learn of the sudden death of Mr. Kepart, who, it will be recalled, was found dead in bed. Mr. Kephart was 86 years of age and his was the first death in quite a large family. On Tuesday his wife, Mrs. Amanda Kephart, died at about 4 o'clock, thus making two deaths in the family in a very short time. Mrs. Kephart was a splendid woman and had many warm friends in the community in which she lived. She was a life-long resident of Buffalo Run valley and was a daughter of Samuel Gray, who was one of the pioneer settlers of that section. Surviving are two sons and three daughters: Benner, Gray, Dora, Eva and Laura.

MRS. LEWIS BROWN.

Mrs. Carrie Humphrey Brown, wife of Lewis Brown, died last Thursday at her late home, at Clearfield, aged 53 yrs. She had been ill but four days. Deceased was born at Philipsburg and was the eldest daughter of Abram Humphrey. She was a member of the Protestant Episcopal Church. Surviving her are the following children: Mrs. Wade Ammerman, Willis M., Ruth, Eva and William, all residing at Clearfield; Fred, living at Lewistown, and Ella, a nurse in the Harrisburg hospital. Interment was made on Saturday afternoon at 2 o'clock.

GEORGE HEVERLY.

George Heverly, a well-known resinent of Eagleville, died suddenly on Tuesday morning at his boarding house, at the clay mines of the Lock Haven Fire Brick Company, at Scootac. He was employed there as a fireman on an engine. He retired on Monday night in apparent good health, but was taken ill several hours later and expired before restoratives could be applied. It is thought that his death was due to heart failure.

TOGO, ANDREWS' DOG, HAS SWELL FUNERAL

First Lies in State at Home of Mrs. E. J. Wilkinson.

IN BULLY CASKET, TOO

Mrs. G. Murry Andrews Travels From Philadelphia to Bellefonte to Superintend Last Rites—Ceremony in Yard of Andrews Home.

Togo is dead!

Another member of a distinguished family gone to its reward.

And what's more to the point, it shuffled off this lowly earth in style and state.

Just what caused Togo to die has not been explained. Nor has it been announced on engraved cards the exact hour of his death, with the name of the attending physicians and a verse or two of printed sympathy.

Nevertheless, Togo had everything else that goes, with a funeral in state. Next to another funeral held not so long ago in the same private burying ground, Togo's final exit was about the swellest thing tidied up for any dog this side of Dog Heaven.

Mrs. G. Murry Andrews arrived in Bellefonte from Philadelphia on Sunday evening. On Monday morning a cherry-stained box made its appearance in Bellefonte. Inside the box was all that remained of Togo. Mrs. Andrews made the journey from Philadelphia to Bellefonte expressly to give Togo a funeral in keeping with his station in life. In about one hour's time the plans for the dog funeral became the talk of the town.

The Andrews residence is closed for the winter, Mr. and Mrs. Andrews making their home temporarily in Philadelphia. Mr. Andrews did not accompany Togo.

Arriving in Bellefonte, Mrs. Andrews went to the home of Mrs. E. J. Wilkinson. When Togo arrived in his satin-lined casket, he too went, or rather was shipped, to the Wilkinson residence. Once there Togo was carried to the second floor. There he remained in state until the moment when he was to be borne to the grave and lowered into the cold earth.

Visitors to the Wilkinson home to see Mrs. Andrews were invited to the second floor to view the remains. Some bluntly declined. All day Monday and all of Tuesday Togo remained at the Wilkinson home. With Wednesday morning came the final parting. A grave had been dug in the Andrews yard, beneath a fine, old tree. Thad. R. Hamilton, the carpenter, had finished his task of making a rough-box. A silver plate adorned the exterior of the casket. The interior was adorned by Togo.

Passers-by on the street quite naturally suspected that a human body was being interred. Those who stopped to rudely peer through the iron fence observed that the procession of mourners was about as brief as was the length of the casket. For Togo was a little bit of a dog, that is in actual dog flesh and hair and bones. He died as would any other dog, but his funeral was a hummer.

A cold, driving rain was falling at the hour appointed for Togo's funeral. About 11:30 o'clock, Mrs. Wilkinson stepped out from her home and walked to the Andrews residence. Next came an attendant carrying the casket, which was screened from curious eyes by a heavy blanket. It was said that when Togo started on his last journey he wore pink ribbons on his feet. Mrs. Andrews and Miss Wilkinson brought up the rear. Togo and the mourners disappeared into the Andrews residence for a few minutes. Then the casket, by this time in the roughbox, was carried out and placed in the grave. Before the earth was tumbled in Mrs. Andrews and Miss Wilkinson walked to the side of the grave and had a final look. Visibly affected, Mrs. Andrews re-entered the house.

Then the common earth of Bellefonte was dumped upon the box that encased the casket that contained the remains of Togo.

Togo went out in a blaze of glory and didn't know it.

Poor Togo.

Mothers' Meeting.

A "Mother's Meeting" will be held at 3.30 o'clock to-morrow (Friday) afternoon, in Petrikin Hall, to which all mothers and others interested in the care and general welfare of children are cordially invited. There will be a short discussion on "The Child in School", and a brief address by Professor Jonas E. Wagner, of the Bellefonte High School.

SEVERAL SURPRISES ATTEND PRIMARIES

Democrats Fail in Plan to Defeat Justice Keichline.

COOK BEATS QUIGLEY

Is Nominated by Two Majority by Republicans for School Director in North Ward—Result in Several Districts in County.

Saturday evening's caucuses in Bellefonte developed a surprise or two for both Republicans and Democrats. A stormy night helped to keep home many who otherwise might have ventured to the polls, but nevertheless spirited contests in the North and South wards served to swell what would have otherwise been a very light vote.

About the most surprised persons in Bellefonte were the Democrats in the South and West wards who thought they had things nicely cooked up to prevent the renomination of Justice of the Peace John M. Keichline. Starting in several days in advance of the primaries they put up James Corl as their candidate and by Saturday eveping they were confident that he would be an easy winner. But 'Squire Keichline had been through too many skirmishes to be caught napping and when the vote was counted in the two wards he bobbed up, smiling as usual and incidentally with the nomination. The vote was 61 to 54 in favor of Keichline in the South ward, and 20 to 15, also in his favor, in the West ward, or a majority of 12 in the two wards. The Republicans in the two wards nominated W. C. Cassidy. In the North ward the Republicans renominated Justice of the Peace W. H. Musser.

The second big surprise of the evening was the nomination of Charles F. Cook, of the Bellefonte Trust Company, for school director on the Republican ticket in the North ward. He defeated Henry C. Quigley, who was seeking renomination, by two majority, the vote being: Cook: 56; Quigley, 54. In the South and West wards the polls were open until 9 o'clock, which has been the custom followed for several years. In the North ward, however, the polls were closed about 8.15 o'clock, and a number who arrived between that time and 9 o'clock were unable to vote. Some of those who arrived late and were deprived of their vote favored Mr. Cook and others were on hand to support Mr. Quigley. Judge of Election Samuel B. Miller had advertised the fact, by means of small bills, that the primaries would be held from 7 to 8 o'clock. He afterward explained that he had followed the instructions of County Chairman Harry Keller. The latter said that he had simply advised Mr. Miller to use his discretion and that he need not necessarily keep the primaries open for longer than an hour or so.

All of which was cold comfort to those who naturally assumed that the polls would remain open from 7 to 9 o'clock, the usual hours, and who arrived at the voting place before 9 o'clock only to find that the voting had been stopped shortly after 8 o'clock.

For borough officers the result developed no surprises. Borough Treasurer Edward J. Gehret was renominated by the Republicans and the Democrats subsequently indorsed him. The Democrats renominated Patrick Gherity for poor overseer. The Republicans later accorded him their indorsement. For Auditor the Republicans named C. K. Hicklen, but Tuesday he withdrew and John Curtin was substituted. The Democratic candidate is Wagner Geiss.

The nominations in the three wards in Bellefonte follow:

CHILD'S NARROW ESCAPE

Daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Samuel Taylor Taken From Burning Burning.

Eleanor, the four-years-old daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Samuel Taylor, formerly of Bellefonte, narrowly escaped being burned to death in the terrible fire which several days ago cost a number of lives and destroyed The Hollingsworth apartment house in Philadelphia.

Mr. Taylor is a Bellefonte boy and his wife will be remembered as Miss Kathryn Lieb, who also resided at Bellefonte.

For a time, after removing to Philadelphia, Mr and Mrs. Taylor and their little daughter made their home at The Hollingsworth apartments. On the day of the fire Mrs. Taylor, accompanied by her daughter, called on a family living at The Hollingsworth. Mrs. Taylor had planned going into the city to do some shopping and reluctantly consented to have Eleanor remain with the family of friends at The Hollingsworth.

It was while she was returning from her shopping expedition that Mrs. Taylor overheard somebody in the street car remark that The Hollingsworth was on fire. Becoming frenzied through fear, she jumped from the rapidly moving car and ran toward the burning building. When she arrived there she could find no trace of her daughter or of the family on whom she had called. Utterly bewildered she searched everywhere and probably an hour later was rewarded by finding the family and learning that little Eleanor had been removed to a place of safety.

It seems that the family, on learning that the house was on fire, tried to leave the building by a front entrance but were driven back by the clouds of heavy smoke that came rolling through the halls. They then made their way to the rear of the building and managed to reach the ground by means of a fire escape.

COASTING ACCIDENT

Misses Lucretia Williams and Helen Valentine Are Injured.

Painful injuries were sustained by Miss Lucretia Williams, a daughter of Mr. and Mrs. George Williams, in a coasting accident on Thursday evening. A sled on which she and several others were coasting down Allegheny Street, collided with a sleigh near the intersection of that street and Linn, and all were thrown on and more or less injured.

Miss Williams sustained a compound fracture of the leg. Miss Helen Valentine, a daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Harry C. Valentine, sustained a severe sprain of the tendons of one foot. Considering the speed with which the sled was going and the nature of the accident it is regarded as almost miraculous that one or more of the party was not killed.

College Trustees.

At the annual meeting of the trustees of State College, held at Harrisburg on Tuesday night, General Beaver was re-elected president; H. Walton Mitchell, of Pittsburg, vice president, and Dr. E. E. Sparks, president of State College, secretary. Indorsement was accorded the movement for college extension, including a night school at Williamsport and an apprentices' school at Altoona. It was also decided to support the train for instruction in safety appliances to be run through mining regions.

The several members of the Executive Committee were re-elected. These additional instructors were chosen: Homer Clouker, Stillwater, Okla., and H. A. Dodge, Burlington, Vt., assistants in animal nutrition; J. W. Gregg, Philadelphia, assistant in horticulture, and C. A. Hogentogler, Hobensack, N. J., assistant in civil engineering.

Mann Edge Tool Factory Burned.

The Mann Edge Tool Factory, at Lewistown, was completely destroyed by fire on Sunday morning, last, entailing a loss of upward of $100,000, partially covered by insurance. It is not improbable that the factory will not be rebuilt, at least not at the present time. It is proposed to transfer the business to the Mill Hall plant, which is owned by the same interests and which has not been in operation for some time. The Lewistown plant, it is understood, will not be rebuilt until business warrants increased facilities.

Amputated Her Arm.

A scratch on the hand, inflicted by a house cat, resulted in the amputation of an arm of Mrs. Annie McKinney, at her home at Avis, Clinton county, on Thursday of last week. Mrs. McKinney, paid little or no attention to the scratch at first, but blood poison finally developed and the operation was deemed necessary to save her life. She quickly rallied after the operation, the arm being amputated above the elbow.

HUSTON IS ON TRIAL IN CAPITOL SCANDAL

Architect Charged with Conspiring to Defraud State.

JURY NOW SELECTED

Defendant Remained in Nearby Hotel When Case Was Called—Hard Legal Battle Anticipated and May Continue Several Weeks.

The long-looked for trial of Joseph M. Huston, architect of the State capitol was begun at Harrisburg on Monday. Huston is being tried on the chrage of conspiring with John M Sanderson, William L. Mathues, William P. Snyder and James M. Sumaker to defraud the State out of $25,571.60 in the furnishing of the new building.

Sanderson and Mathues are dead. All told five of those implicated in the capital scandal have died in the last two years.

Huston was not in court when his case was called. With his brother, Samuel C. Huston, and an attendant, he remained in his rooms at a nearby hotel. A severance in the case was granted Huston some time ago. Shumaker and Snyder are not attending the trial of their co-defendant.

It is believed that the trial will continue several weeks. James Scarlet, special counsel for the State, is in charge just as he was in the cases which resulted in the conviction of Sanderson, Shumaker, Snyder, and Mathues.

Considerable interest attended the selection of the jury which is to determine the fate of Huston. The twelve men chosen were the following:

William P. Mowery, foreman, Pennsylvania railroad conductor, Harrisburg.

Evan Evans, miner, Wiconisco township.

Joseph E. Bowman, miller, Millersburg

Ambrose Lindsay, laborer, Harrisburg.

Otto E. Schmeidel, Central Pennsylvania Traction company conductor, Swatara township.

William M. Shutt, inspector, Penbrook.

Agustus Zefass, laborer, Hummelstown.

David R. McNeal, painter, Susquehanna township.

George W. Meck, painter, Harrisburg.

Thomas L. Snyder, foundryman, Uniontown.

William J. Baker, farmer, Jackson township.

Cyrus Vovinger, carpenter, Middle Paxton township.

HOTEL CHANGES HANDS

J. McClellan Davis, of Tyrone, Takes the Garman House.

An important deal was closed on Tuesday afternoon whereby J. McClellan Davis, of Tyrone, becomes proprietor of the Garman House, succeeding Richard Sheehe. The deal has been under way for some time, but was not consummated until Tuesday, when the papers were signed. Mr. Davis will take charge of the hotel about February 8 or 9. The new proprietor of the Garman House was for a time connected with the Ward House, at Tyrone, and also with the Altamont Hotel, at Altoona.

Mr. Sheehe will return to his old home at Clearfield. He will not re-enter the hetel busiuess. Mrs. Sheehe has been ill for the last year or more and it is Mr. Sheehe's desire to be free from active business until her health is fully restored.

We regret that Mr Sheehe will remove his residence from Bellefonte. A quiet, gentlemanly, courteous man, he has made many friends in our town and they all wish him success in whatever business he may engage in the future.

BASHFUL STANLEY.

His Response to a Speech of Eulogy at a Banquet.

William H. Rideing tells in McClure's Magazine of a dinner of the Papyrus club in Boston at which Henry M. Stanley, the explorer, was the guest of honor:

"Whether he (Stanley) sat or stood, he fidgeted and answered in monosyllables—not because he was unamiable or unappreciative, but because he—this man of iron, God's instrument, whose word in the field brooked no contradiction or evasion, he who defied obstacles and danger and pierced the heart of darkness—was bashful even in the company of fellow craftsmen.

"His embarrassment grew when after dinner the chairman eulogized him to the audience. He squirmed and averted his face as cheer after cheer confirmed the speaker's rhetorical ebullience of praise. 'Gentlemen, I introduce to you Mr. Stanley, who,' etc. The hero stood up slowly, painfully, reluctantly, and, with a gesture of deprecation, fumbled in first one and then another of his pockets without finding what he sought.

"It was supposed that he was looking for his notes, and more applause took the edge off the delay. His mouth twitched without speech for another awkward minute before, with a more erect bearing, he produced the object of his search and put it on his head. It was not paper, but a rag of a cap, and with that on he faced the company as one who by the act had done all that could be expected of him and made further acknowledgment of the honors he had received superfluous. It was a cap that Livingstone had worn and that Livingstone had given him."

ISLAND COMES AND GOES.

Rises In August and Disappears Regularly In February.

One of Michigan's unsolved mysteries is the island that every summer comes to the surface of Lake Orion and every winter goes back again to the depths from whence it arose.

Its periods of appearance and disappearance are nearly regular. It comes to the surface about the middle of August and goes down again about Feb. 15. What causes it to act thus strangely is a conundrum that none has been able to solve, but to keep it above water or compel it to remain in the depths have been alike without results.

On one occasion a number of farmers and teamsters resolved to put the island out of moving business. In their efforts to do so they hauled many loads of stone and deposited them on it during the early part of winter, believing that when it went down in February it would go down for good, weighted as it was with the stones. But the following August saw it bob up serenely from below—minus its load of stones.

At another time an effort was made to keep it on the surface, and it was chained to the surrounding country with heavy log chains. When its time for departure came it departed, and the log chains departed with it. The log chains were never recovered.

The island is composed of soft mud and rushes, and there are some skeptical souls who attribute its formation and appearance and disappearance to the gathering of vegetation in one spot by the currents of the lake and its subsequent decay.—Boston Herald.

"Window Leaves."

In South Africa Dr. R. Marloth discovered six species of plants possessing what are styled "window leaves." They are all stemless succulents, and the egg shaped leaves are imbedded in the ground, only the apexes remaining visible. This visible part of the leaves is flat or convex on the surface and colorless, so that the light can penetrate it and reach the interior of the leaf below, which is green on the inside. With the exception of the blunt apex, no part of the leaf is permeable to the light, being surrounded by the soil in which it is buried. The first of these plants discovered is a species of bulbine.—London Graphic.

The Manly Man.

"After you've been two weeks in the house with one of these terrible handy men that ask their wives to be sure to wipe between the tines of the forks and that know just how much raising bread ought to have and how to hang out a wash so each piece will get the best sun it's a real joy to get back to the ordinary kind of man. Yes, 'tis so!" Mrs. Gregg finished with much emphasis. "I want a man who should have sense about the things he's meant to have sense about, but when it comes to keeping house I like him real helpless, the way the Lord planned to have him!"—Youth's Companion.

A Costly Funeral.

The most costly state funeral which has ever taken place was perhaps that of Alexander the Great. A round million was spent in laying Alexander to his rest. The body was placed in a coffin of gold filled with costly aromatics, and a diadem was placed on the head. The funeral car was embellished with ornaments of pure gold, and its weight was so great that it took eighty-four mules more than a year to convey it from Babylon to Syria.

The Main Thing.

Chief of Detectives—Now give us a description of your missing cashier. How tall was he? Business Man—I don't know how tall he was. What worries me is that he was $10,000 short.

Joys are our wings, sorrows are our spurs.—Richter.

Simply a Man Hunt.

"I declare!" shouted a bellboy in one of the big downtown hotels as he dashed into the lobby.

"I declare!" he shrieked again, or at least it sounded like that.

An irascible old gentleman whose eardrums were jarred by the shrill screech wheeled about and glared at the boy.

"I declare!" he piped louder than before.

"Well, what's the answer?" demanded the old man gruffly.

"I declare!" came the shrill reply.

"Oh, you do, eh?" snorted the old fellow. "Well, why the deuce don't you?"

The bellboy cast a withering glance at him, gazed searchingly about the room and emitted a shrill "Declare!"

"Say," exclaimed the old chap, collaring the boy, "what the dickens is wrong with you, anyway? Are you going crazy?"

"Naw, I ain't goin' crazy," replied the brass buttoned one. "I got a telegram fer 'em; that's all. Aw, look fer yerself!" exclaimed the boy disgustedly as he shoved the yellow envelope under the old fellow's nose. It was addressed "I. D. Clair."

"Well, I declare!" gasped the old man weakly as he sank into his seat.—Pittsburg Gazette.

Show Windows In Austria.

The Austrian shopkeeper takes great pride in having his window dressed in an attractive manner and the glass perfectly clean at all times, no matter how small the shop or how small the city. Frequently the greater part of the stock of merchandise is displayed in the windows of the smaller shops. It is much less difficult to make attractive displays than in American stores, as windows open outward on hinges. Even heavy plate glass windows ten to fifteen feet square are so arranged and dressed from the street instead of from the inside, as in America. The large windows are usually arranged in the morning before many pedestrians are on the street. The wall space between shops is frequently rented by owners of adjoining stores and arranged to appear like windows, giving the appearance of being a large shop. When one wishes to examine an article displayed in a window the proprietor or clerk goes to the street with a key, unlocks the window and takes out the article, then locks his window again.

The Only Difference.

Clorinda was as black as night and of heroic proportions, but in every possible way she copied her slender young mistress, for whom she had a great admiration. "I like to look jes' as much like you as I can," she often said, "'cause you looks jes' like a lady orter look, Mis' Hend'son."

Clorinda intrusted all her shopping to Mrs. Henderson and scorned the bright colors and pronounced styles affected by her own friends. One day she asked her mistress to buy her a pair of low shoes. As she made the request she glanced with admiration at the slim little foot showing beneath the edge of a dainty skirt.

"An' I want 'em jes' exactly like yours, Mis' Hend'son," said Clorinda. "no diff'ence 'ceptin' dey's gotter be wide nines, so maybe de buckle might 'pear better if 'twas a teenty mite larger'n yours."—Youth's Companion.

Father's Method.

During a recent slight illness the five-year-old Teddy, usually so amiable, flatly and obstinately refused to take his medicine. After a somewhat prolonged and ineffectual argument with him his mother at last set the glass of medicine down, leaned her head on her hands and "played" that she was crying. A moment passed, and the tender hearted Teddy, unable longer to bear the sight of his mother's stricken attitude, inquired, "What's the matter, mother, dear?" Without removing her hands from her eyes she replied, "I'm grieved that my son won't take his castor oil for me." Whereupon Teddy sat up in bed and offered consolingly: "Oh, I wouldn't feel bad if I were you, mother, dear. Father will be home soon, and he'll make me take it."—Delineator.

Bunching the Hits.

A legal journal tells a story of an Illinois attorney who argued to the court one after another a series of very weak points, none of which seemed to the court to have any merit until the court finally said, "Mr. ——, do you think there is anything in these points?' To which the attorney replied, "Well, judge, perhaps there isn't much in any one of them alone, but I didn't know but your honor would kind of bunch them."

Had Authority.

A case was being tried before the late Lord Young, "Crabbe versus Crabbie."

"I may explain, my lud," said the advocate, "that my client Crabbe is a nephew of our opponent Crabbie, but a few years ago he dropped the 'l' in his name for the sake of euphony."

"Ah," replied Lord Young, "he has Biblical authority for that—'If thy "I" offend thee, pluck it out.'"—Westminster Gazette.

Different Now.

"They say his wife was the inspiration of some of his best plays."

"Yes; he produced them before he was married."—Chicago Record-Herald.

PACKING FOR EXPORT

Pennsylvania Railroad Plans Reducing Damage Claims.

In furtherance of its campaign to secure better packing of articles offered for shipment over its lines, the Pennsylvania Railroad is to distribute, through its Freight Department, thousands of copies of the pamphlet just issued by the Department of Commerce and Labor, entitled "Packing For Export".

The Pennsylvania Railroad has in the past two years been adopting every possible expedient for reducing the number of damage claims made by its shippers. It estimates that last year the Pennsylvania paid out $185,000.00 in damage claims which arose from poor and insecure packing. Due to the efforts made in the past year to impress upon shippers the advantage of better packing of freight, it is thought that the losses sustained in 1909 on this account will be somewhat smaller.

The many complaints received from consular agents that American exporters do not pay sufficient attention to the packing of merchandise for shipment to foreign countries has caused the Department of Commerce and Labor to issue a pamphlet describing in detail the so-called packing evils. The pamphlet is profusely illustrated with photographs of typical samples of poor packing. It is these booklets which the Pennsylvania Railroad is to distribute to the shippers along its lines.

The railroad managers have estimated the freight loss and damage in the United States to aggregate 20 million dollars per annum, while economic loss to the country is vastly greater. The greatest source of this loss is improper and inadequate packing. The loss in the foreign trade is not included in the twenty million, but aggregates a large sum. Reports from consuls and special agents received by the Bureau of Manufactures show not only loss in the articles shipped, but a loss of trade because of carelessness in packing.

Many reports show large consignments of goods practically ruined because of inadequate packing. For instance, out of 1,000 bags of cottonseed meal shipped to a European port, 800 were badly torn and damaged because of inadequate wrapping. Machinery is frequently received at foreign ports in a ruined condition because sent in thin pine boxes instead of being "knocked down" and properly guarded. There is great loss in cotton bales because of inadeduate covering, although cotton shipped from Egypt rarely sustains any loss, as it is properly guarded and packed.

The Pennsylvania Railroad has only recently been endeavoring to educate shippers to the needs for better packing, by taking parties of them around to freight stations that they might see the poor condition in which many packages of freight are received for transportation. This campaign of education is to be extended to cover the entire railroad, and it is to be followed by the distribution of literature urging shippers to pack freight securely to insure its safe delivery to their customers.

SANITARY COW STALLS

The demand for pure milk produced under sanitary conditions is constantly increasing, and to produce such milk it is necessary to have clean cows kept in sanitary stalls, says Professor C. A. Ocock, of the Department of Agricultural Engineering at the University of Wisconsin College of Agriculture, in Bulletin 185 of the Agricultural Experiment Station, just off the press.

The wisdom of building such quarters for dairy animals as are easily kept clean has been emphasized recently by the agitation resulting in pure food laws and a public sentiment demanding a higher grade of milk and better products from dairies. Most old stalls are not sanitary, since the ties, stanchions and partitions do not keep the cows clean and comfortable, and are inconvenient for feeding, milking and cleaning.

"There seems to be a prevailing impression among dairymen that a comfortable sanitary stall or stanchion is an expensive factory product," the bulletin points out. "The fact is that any farmer who is handy with carpenter's tools can build a stall which will secure as good results as any patented stall upon the market."

The five points considered in planning the construction of the four types of home made sanitary stalls described in the bulletin are cleanliness, convenience, cheapness and security. The thirteen drawings with which the bulletin is illustrated were selected from a large number of plans which, although not perfect, are the best yet designed.

The nearest approach to a perfect stall of any in use, the author of the bulletin says, is the "Model" stall, originated by ex-Governor W. D. Hoard and used in his own stables for many years. It is so constructed as to force the cow to stand with her hind feet between a moveable cross bar and the gutter, so that the stall is not fouled. The bar and the chair fastening compel her to step forward when she wants to lie down, so that she is kept clean. The position in which the hayrack is hung, too, makes it necessary for the cow to stand back while eating. Hay is put into the rack from the front, and the door through which grain and water are given opens upward.

A feature of the stall which is well worth the cost of construction is the erection of the partitions in a manner that makes it practically impossible for a cow to step upon the udder or teat of the one lying next to her.

The wooden mat over the concrete floor is removable, for cleansing purposes. Where it seems desirable, Professor Ocock says, the manger may be of concrete, like the floor, and where new stalls are under construction the mangers and floor should be made at the same time, as they will thus be more durable than when made separately. - Professor C. A. Ocock, Department of Agricultural Engineering.

The Tea-Table Cabinet

Just above the tea-table of one hospitable woman, within easy reach and matching it in the matter of wood and finish, hangs a pretty cabinet with glass doors.

In this little cupboard the tea-cups, sugar-bowl and other hospitable furnishings are kept within easy reach. When ever a cup of tea is to be served to the guest, it is the work of a moment to lift them down.

Left on the table the "tea things" become dusty and dingy even when the little people of the family or a boisterous pet of the beastie sort does not cause a downfall of china more interesting to the house-mistress than the one effected by the Euporean allies. The tea-table cabinet is one way of insuring the "five o'clock" in dainty fashion and with the least possible trouble to the entertainer. Rose Henderson in the Woman's Home Companion for January.

Sleep

Sleep is nature's rebuilding period, when the energy used by the brain, muscles and organs is renewed. If you lose sleep, your system is robbed of the strength sleep should give. Continued loss of sleep multiplies this loss until you become a physical wreck. Dr. Miles' Nervine quiets the irritated nerves and brings refreshing, invigorating sleep. Nervine contains no opiates, and therefor leaves no bad after-effects.

"For over two years I suffered untold agonies; my friends thought I was going crazy. I could not sleep nor rest at all. I tried different doctors, but failed to find relief. My head would ache all the time; I was like one drunk; could not concentrate my mind, and was so restless and worried that sleep was out of the question. After taking one bottle of Dr. Miles' Nervine I felt wonderfully changed. I am now on my third bottle and am gaining all the time. I can lie down and sleep like a child, and am able to do my work." "ANOTHER'S SHOES."

A Phrase That Had Its Origin In an Ancient Custom.

The expression "stepping into another's shoes," like many another common phrase, had its origin in an ancient custom.

The old Norse law required that a person to be adopted must step into a previously prepared shoe. This shoe was made from the skin taken from the right hind leg of a "three-winters-old bull."

The skin was flayed from above the hock, and out of this the shoe was made. The person to be adopted stepped into this shoe, taking into his arms one at a time, it is presumed, the younger sons of the man making the adoption. If there were also sons who were of age they stepped into the shoe afterward, by this sign showing their consent to the adoption.

A man in this way could adopt an illegitimate son, making him his lawful heir, but in that case the father was obliged to step into the shoe first. If there were any full grown sons, they stepped into the shoe afterward; if there were no full grown sons, then the next of kin did the stepping, and without his consent, by the way, this special adoption could not be made.

Witnesses to the ceremony in the use of the shoe were required to establish its legality.

It will be seen that this was considered an important ceremony, and since so much "shoe stepping" was done it is not strange that the expression as now used passed into common speech.—Chicago Record-Herald.

OSTRICH BATTLES.

The Great Birds, as Strong as Horses, Box With Their Feet.

Ostriches battle for supremacy with as much ferocity as stags, bulls, buffaloes and other animals. An ostrich fight is amusing, inasmuch as it amounts practically to a boxing match with the feet, wherein the combatants lightly dance around each other.

There is, however, this difference—if any human boxer could hit as hard with his hands as can an ostrich with its feet the championship would be decided by a single blow. In sparring the ostrich stands on one foot, with the other foot and the wings raised, the bill wide open and the neck distended. He strikes with the force of a trip hammer.

Sometimes on an ostrich farm a keeper will become involved in such a mixup, in which event it is not infrequently the case that the human emerges from the scrap with a broken leg, arm or head.

Under modern training an ostrich equals a horse in power and indeed can perform many of the "stunts" whereof his equine colleague is capable. In one respect, however, he excels the horse, for by the aid of its wings the ostrich can leave behind the swiftest running thoroughbred. In harness an ostrich has at Hot Springs, Ark., paced in about a horse's time.—Harper's Weekly.

His Unlucky Day.

Even the least superstitious are often struck by the misfortunes which attend some persons on certain dates. A large firm in the city has in its employ a living instance of the fact. On June 12 an employee lost his left arm by coming in contact with machinery. The accident disabled him for his then employment, and he was given that of a messenger. On another June 12 he was run over in the Strand while on an errand. Result, a broken leg. The next accident was a fall on the stairs in the firm's buildings—again June 12—the right arm broken this time. The fourth mishap on another anniversary broke three ribs. The firm took the case into consideration and issued an order that in future the employee was to take a holiday on that date, an order with which he has now complied for several years.—London Chronicle.

His Second Thought.

A politician named Blank got a place for a clerk during one of the sessions of the legislature of his state. The clerk was very grateful, says the Saturday Evening Post. At the end of the session he came around to Blank and said: "Mr. Blank, I want to tell you how much I am indebted to you for your kindness in getting me the place I have had. It meant more to me, Mr. Blank, than you may think. I thank you from the bottom of my heart. Also I want to say, Mr. Blank, that if there ever comes a time when I can do anything for you—anything at all—you are to command me. I will do anything you may ask me to do. I am at your service."

Blank thanked the man, and he started to go. As he reached the door he turned and said, "Of course, Mr. Blank, I would prefer that it should be something honorable."

"Hooray!" cried the prisoner.

Then the judge pondered.—Judge.

A Purist.

Most persons believe Stevenson's verses for children may, without correction or amendment, safely be placed in the hands of the impressionable youngster without corrupting either his morals or his English. But there are some who think otherwise, says an exchange.

Little Alice's mother, having taught the child to say, "Time to rise," in which "the birdie with a yellow bill" figures, the child announced that she meant to recite it to her teacher.

"Well, and what did Miss Prim say to 'the birdie with a yellow bill?'" asked Alice's mother when the little girl returned from school.

"She says it is quite a pretty thought. But this is the way she makes me say it now, mamma:

"A birdie with a yellow bill
Hopped upon the window sill,
Cocked his shining eye and said,
'Are you not ashamed, you sleepyhead?'"

"But that was not the way the birdie said it, Alice," the mother remonstrated.

"No, mamma; I know. But teacher says it isn't good English to say, 'Ain't you 'shamed, you sleepyhead?'"

Sixteenth Century Meals.

Judging from a passage in Harrison's "Description of Britain," breakfast eating in the sixteenth century was held to denote effeminacy. "Heretofore," he writes, "there hath been more time spent in eating and drinking than commonly is in these days, for, whereas of old we had breakfasts in the forenoon, beverages or nuntion after dinner and thereto reare suppers when it was time to go to rest, now these old repasts, thanked be Gods, are verie well left, and ech one (except here and there some young hungrie stomach that cannot fast till dinner time) contenteth himself with dinner and supper onlie. * * * The nobilitie, gentrie and students ordinarilie go to dinner at 11 before noon and to supper at 5 or between 5 and 6 at afternoon. The merchants dine and sup seldom before 12 at noon and 6 at night, especialie in London. The husbandmen dine also at high noon and sup at 7 or 8, but out of the tearme in our universities the scholars dine at 10."

A Curious Trail.

All sorts of devices have been used to mark a line of march. A unique method of "blazing the trail" is still to be seen in Africa, and a recent publication prints a picture of one of these memorials of the dervish raid. Arthur J. Hayes mentions the subject in his "Source of the Blue Nile."

In 1889, after a fierce battle with the Abyssinians, the dervishes pursued their foes as far as the lake district. The mahdi's men had small knowledge of geography and little togographical intelligence. So the advance party, in order to mark the route for those who came after and also to guide the force on their return journey, twisted the saplings along the way into living knots. The war ended, but the tied up trees grew and flourished, but uncouthly twisted and distorted, and are now the only reminders of that uprising of the dervishes.

Where Nature Cooks the Food.

In certain parts of New Zealand both native and white women use the natural hot springs to do their cooking. In the Rotorua region, it matters not whether the cook wishes to roast a piece of meat, boil potatoes or steam pudding, all she has to do is to step out of doors and place the cooking utensil in a steam hole. The cover is then put on, and a piece of coarse sacking over the whole completes the operation. In a short time dinner is ready. At Whakarewarewa the entire earth just beneath the surface is a mass of boiling springs. Millions of gallons of hot water hiss and steam, sending vapors skyward in great white clouds. Strike the ground almost anywhere with a stick and the hole thus formed fills with hot water. Hot water for baths, the week's washing and for the ordinary purposes of the household is always on hand.

Hard on the Chairs.

Among the ancestors of Wendell Phillips were several Puritan clergymen. Perhaps it was a push of heredity which made him at five years of age a preacher.

His congregation was composed of circles of chairs arranged in his father's parlor, while a taller chair, with a Bible on it, served him for a pulpit. He would harangue these wooden auditors by the hour.

"Wendell," said his father to him one day, "don't you get tired of this?"

"No, papa," wittily replied the boy preacher, "I don't get tired, but it is rather hard on the chairs."

Obeyed Him.

"Whare's old Four Fingered Pete?" asked Alkali Ike. "I ain't seen him around since I got back."

"Pete?" said the bartender. "Oh, he went up to Hyena Tongue and got jagged. Went up to a hotel winder, stuck his head in and hollered 'Fire!' an' everybody did."—Everybody's Magazine.

Painful Cleanliness.

MARGARET ANGLIN ON DRESS

She Says "Save on Frocks and Put the Money Into Furs."

"My clothes creed is well summed in three statements," says Margaret Anglin in Human Life. "First, I believe in saving in the number of frocks and putting the money into good furs.

"Furs are very expensive, and they are constantly growing more so. Nevertheless they are so becoming to all women that it pays to sacrifice other things in the wardrobe to buy them and to buy good ones.

"Next, I believe in having good, well cut gowns, little trimmed, but plenty of jabots and guimps and yokes and collars, so that there can be fresh, clean things for the neck every day. I like the intimate things, those clothes that touch the skin, to be dainty.

"Third, I believe in the tailor gown, but I like it trimmed and softened. The adorned French and American tailor mades I prefer to the unadorned English styles, which are too trying for any woman.

"To this creed I would add that if I were very poor and able to have but few clothes I should make a point of having my gowns made just alike. Then no one would ever know which were new and which old. I should always wear black in the day and white in the evening.

"But every one likes to dilate upon his creed, so let me add something by way of elucidation and elaboration to mine. First, as to furs. I prefer dark furs. They look richer and, as a rule, are more becoming. Personally I like the long haired furs, but if I were of less height I should wear the short haired ones. Mink is the favorite, as it should be, of short women.

"For the street I like the plainest gowns in cut and color I can get, but I will not wear the English tailor made frock, which in every respect except bifurcation is exactly like a man's business suit. The French and Americans trim these suits, feminizing them with rows of braid and bands of silk or folds of velvet, and they are incalculably more becoming.

"The English tailor suit demands a stiff linen or heavy flannel shirt waist. The French or American permits bodices of silk or velvet or even of chiffon. A French tailor suit I got in Paris and have worn, as it seems, endlessly is of blue black cheviot cut with a long coat and plain but flaring skirt.

"So far it is English, but it has a becoming shawl collar of soft silk and rows of braid that brighten it. And the bodice is of black chiffon with pipings of pale blue silk, and with it I wear a fresh guimpe of lace or embroidered linen or of white chiffon every day. Odds and ends left from a wornout white frock work up finely into dainty accessories like this that make a costume charming.

"One rule I always follow—I never wear in the house the gown I have worn on the street. The moment I come into the house, no matter how tired I am, I slip off the street suit and get into a house gown.

"The change in itself rests too. I do this in part from hygienic motives, in part from artistic ones. The street gown is not sanitarily fit to be worn in the house until it has been well brushed and gone over to rid it of any germs it might have accumulated on the crowded pavements, crowded in more than one way. But artistically the street gown is also impossible. It doesn't go with the furniture."

A clean cloth dipped in hot water and then placed in a saucer of bran will clean white paint and not injure it. The soft bran acts like a soap to the paint.

A crust of bread is best to clean a sticky bread or cake pan. Never use a knife or anything which will scratch the surface and invite more sticking thereafter.

Carrots should be cut in slices instead of cubes, because the outside part, which is the darkest, is the richest. If cut into slices it is more equally distributed.

The easiest way to clean a cereal cooker is to turn it upside down in a pan of boiling water and steam it until the mass is soft and loosened from the sides of the pan.

Planning His Career.

Seven-year-old Horace had a great desire to follow his father's career. He was overheard by his mother saying his prayers one night:

A JOKE ON THE COMPANY.

A Second Sight Trick With a Humorous Ending.

This amusing trick of "second sight" may be enacted with great success at any evening's entertainment.

A blackboard, a piece of chalk and a sheet of paper are the necessary requirements. First announce to the company that if any one or number of the persons before you write down any word or number of words upon the paper that you, without seeing the paper, will then write upon the blackboard those very words.

Of course every one will smile incredulously at this remarkable statement and at once call upon you to prove what you claim you can do.

When the paper is ready direct it to be hidden while you turn your back, and when the paper is invisible then is the time when you make ready for your share of the fun, which in the end will be the lion's share.

Place the blackboard in a position so the audience cannot see the front of it, and then assume an attitude of deep concentration, as if you were calling up the invisible writing. Then say, "Now, if some one will kindly read aloud what is on the paper it will prove that I have written those very words."

The paper is read, and the time has arrived to turn the board around. When the spectators see what is on it the laugh will certainly be on them, for you have done exactly what you boasted you would do—written "those very words."

Boomerangs For the Fireside.

The peculiar weapon of the natives of Australia is the boomerang, a curved blade of wood of such remarkable construction that it swerves from its direct course, sometimes returning so as to hit an object behind the thrower.

Model boomerangs for indoor amusement can be easily made with cardboard. Cut the cardboard out in any of the shapes shown in the cut and take care that it is not bent in any way and that it lays flat on a table.

This indoor boomerang is so light that it cannot be thrown like the genuine article by the hand. Lay the boomerang on a book, with one end projecting over the side. Hold the book up level with the eye and give a smart tap to the projecting piece with a lead pencil. Take care to strike only the side of the boomerang. It will be found to dart forward a considerable distance, then turn and come back to near where it started.

Lend a Hand—or Both.

Have you ever noticed what a curious effect it gives to lend your arms to somebody else? This is not a question of giving aims, simply of lending them for a few moments. This is the way to do it:

Let your friend clasp her hands behind her back and then slip your arms in through hers, so that from the front your arms look as if they belonged to her. If she wears a shawl the effect will be better, and unless you are very much shorter than she you must crouch down, so that the people won't see your head above hers. It is really very curious to see how different people look with some one else's hands, which are surprisingly unsuitable. Then with your hands you can go through all sorts of poses—clap them, shake them, pretend to cry (that is, hold a handkerchief to your friend's eyes), rearrange the shawl or assume a thoughtful pose. If you want to give a really funny performance let the front person wear a long robe to cover up the one in back and then let her recite some dramatic poem, while the other makes appropriate and exaggerated gestures. Usually the person who lends the arms will find it more comfortable to lean on a stool instead of stooping.

An Armorclad Nest.

In the Argentine Republic, says a writer in the Strand, where the summers are long and hot, it is customary to leave the windows open both day and night during the hottest part of the year. A bird, taking advantage of this, proceeded to build a nest in my room, fixing it firmly to one of the venetian blinds over the window. The eggs were duly hatched and the young birds fledged. On taking down the empty nest I found it to be practically armorclad, the outer part being composed almost entirely of rusty nails, woven in among the hay. On counting the nails I found that no fewer than sixty-six had been used, besides some wire and pins taken from my dressing table. The bird was about the size of a robin and very tame.

My Dog Curl.

I have a little curly dog
As black as black can be,
And when I go about the farm
Curl always goes with me.

We caught a muskrat in a trap
Down by the willow fence.
We sold the skin and had a treat
With what we got—ten cents.

They asked if I would sell my dog
And take his skin off too.
I said no one would skin my Curl,
Not ever, if I knew!

Mantelpieces.

"It has long been a question," says John D. Adams in Woman's Home Companion for January, "for those of good taste, as to where the average landlord obtained the ugly mantelpieces which are used in so many rented houses and apartments. What horrors of machine carving, scrollwork, meaningless curves, complicated shelves and brackets which were apparently meant only to catch dust, together with an absolute lack of fitness to the proportions of the room in which it was located—how many people have groaned before such a mantelpiece and realized that it was impossible through reasons of economy to replace it?

A mantelpiece ought to serve as a frame for the grate; it ought to be one of the most attractive furnishings of the room; it ought to be built on lines of simplicity and sound proportion, and have an air of strength and stability about it; it should have space to hold a chosen piece of pottery or two and a copper jug, a few books, perhaps a flower and a small picture. Most important of all, it should be an integral part of the room in which it is located, and not a big, misplaced, badstyle ornament.

The readers of this paper will be pleased to learn that there is at least one dreaded disease that science has been able to cure in all its states, and that is Catarrh. Hall's Catarrh Cure is the only positive cure now known to the medical fraternity. Catarrh being a constitutional disease, requires a constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure is taken internally, action directly upon the blood and mucous surfaces of the system, thereby destroying the foundation of the disease, and giving the patient strength by building up the constitution and assisting nature in doing its work. The proprietors have so much faith in its curative powers that they offer One Hundred Dollars for any case that it fails to cure. Send for list of testimonials.

MORE FARMS IN OREGON

Twenty Thousand Acres of Fruit Land to be Opened for Entry.

Twenty thousand acres of land bordering on the Columbia River, about 190 miles east of Portland, Ore., will be thrown open to homestead entry at 9 a. m. on February 10. This announcement was made by Secretary Ballinger at Washington several days ago.

Within this tract opportunity will be given to take up a farm varying in size from ten to forty acres, on which the charge for building the irrigation system is $60 an acre, payable $18 an acre at the time of making entry and $6 an acre a year thereafter. The land all lies below an elevation of six hundred feet above sea level, thus insuring climatic conditions favorable to the early ripening of fruit.

To Owners of Pianos.

William P. Weaver and his cousin Ralph Weaver, of Sioux City, Iowa, have returned to Port Matilda, to the home of their father and uncle, respectively, M. T. Weaver. Mr. Weaver's son went west in April, 1909, since which time he has been through Nebraska, North Dakota, South Dakota and California. Locating at Sioux City he was engaged for a time with the American Express Company, later going with the Schmoller & Mueller Piano Company as a salesman, repair agent and polisher. He learned his trade with the company, becoming quite efficient in that line of work. Mr. Weaver resigned his position in order that he might return to Port Matilda, his former home, and engage in business for himself. He is now prepared to do all kinds of work on pianos and organs, assuring his friends that his work will be guaranteed and that his prices will be reasonable. Address all orders to William P. Weaver, Port Matilda, Pa.

Laughs at Old Age.

Clinton county proudly boasts of having one of the oldest young men in the State, Joseph Cummings, of Westport. Mr. Cummings is very active, working every day, and on Wednesday, when the skating on the river was good, he picked up his skates and without telling any one what he was going to do went to the river, put them on, cut several fancy figures, and then skated to Renovo, a distance of seven miles. When asked if it was not exertion for him, he replied: "No, indeed, it was a pleasure and I did not rest once."

Mr. Cummings is 78 years old.

WINS TEST CASE

State Victorious in Suit Involving Use of Alum in Baking Powder.

The State won an important test case at Harrisburg last Saturday, the point involved being the right to sell baking powder containing alum. The trial determined that this is a violation of the law.

Special Agent H. I. Banzhoff, of the dairy and food bureau, purchased a specimen of baking powder known as "Davis O. K. Baking Powder," the selling grocer being Myer Gross, of Harrisburg. This was sent to Professor James A. Evans, of Erie, who analyzed it and reported that it contained an added substance, alum. Whereupon Agent Banzhoff made information against Gross.

The alum baking powder interests were represented by several of their leading members. It was generally understood that these were the real defendants. The witnesses on the part of the Commonwealth were Special Agent H. L. Banzhoff, who testified to the purchase of the specimen and to the fact that it was forwarded to the chemist; Professor J. A. Evans, who conducted the analysis and testified to the presence of alum, and Professors William Frear, of State College; Floyd W. Robison, of Lansing, Mich.; C. H. LaWall, of Philadelphia; C. B. Cochran, of West Chester; F. T. Aschman, of Pittsburg, and R. B. Fitz Randolph, of Trenton, N. J., who corroborated the conclusions of Professor Evans. Among the witnesses for the defense were Professor G. G. Pond, of State College; Drs. Pennimen and Jorup, of Philadelphia; W. L. DeJawn, of the General Chemical Co., New York; John W. Bach, of the Superior Chemical Co. Joliet, Ill.; Thomas J. Parker, Philadelphia; W. J. Bartlett, Pennsylvania Salt Manufacturing Co.; William H. Watt, Providence Chemical Co., Providence, R. I., and Dr. Aram Ellsworth Smith, a noted chemist of New York.

The dairy and food division was represented by Lyman H. Gilbert and E. E. Beidleman, of Harrisburg, and A. H. Woodward, of Clearfield. The attorneys for the defense were: C. H. Bergner, of Harrisburg; F. W. Fleitz, of Scranton, and Randolph Barton, of Baltimore.

The defense set up that sodium aluminic sulphate, which is the substance used in the baking powder in question, is not alum within the meaning of the fact.

It also attacked the constitutionality of the law.

A motion was at once made for a new trial and it is said the case will be carried to the United States courts.

Dr. Huff, of Milesburg, and Claude Smith of State College are in New York on business.

Watching Browntail Moth.

The State authorities are keeping a close watch for the browntail moth, the insect which has caused thousands of dollars in loss to tree owners in the several counties. Chief Nursey Inspector E. B. Engle has addressed a letter to nurserymen in Pennsylvania to advise him when they expect shipments of nursery stock from France, Holland and Germany, in order that he may be at the Philadelphia port and inspect the trees for webs of the browntail. Assurances of co-operation have been given Inspector Engle by many nurseymen and it is believed that by keeping a close watch for the pest it can be kept out of the State.

"Ye Olde Time" social held by the 1910 graduating class in the High school room Saturday evening was a success in every way and a source of much pleasure to those who attended. During the evening there were amusements of different kinds, together with vocal and instrumental music, and the resurrection of the many old time costumes which were worn by a number of pupils, added to the gayety of the social. There was a good attendance and all enjoyed themselves to their heart's content The class realized something over twenty-six dollars from the social, which will be applied toward the graduating expenses.

Last Wednesday evening a number of the S. S. S., an exclusive ladies club of this place, some of whom were accompanied by their husbands, were driven to Bellefonte in a large sled and were entertained as the home of Mr. and Mrs. Oscar Yerger, formerly residents of this place. The annual teachers institute for District No. 4, which was held in the Methodist church in this place last Friday evening and Saturday, was full of interest to the teachers of the district and those interested in the education of our children. The high waters that prevailed in the Bald Eagle creek at the time interfered somewhat with the attendance and doubtless kept many away who would have attended otherwise. There were a number of important subjects on the program and the discussion of these questions kept up a lively interest at all times. The institute was a very successful one and was well managed by the chairman, Prof. Weirick, of the Howard schools.

The rain and thaw last Friday caused the streams hereabouts to leave their banks and as a result was more or less damaging to fences and property. Bald Eagle creek was higher than it had been for some time, while many of the mountain streams were turned into raging torrents. Lick Run, which had been filled with ice during the cold weather, caused much damage along the territory through which it flows. The water was so high that it ran over the railroad bridge east of town and a string of freight cars were kept standing on the bridge for some time. The W. H. Long mill dam was also badly damaged. At the Hunter Run school house the water rose so rapidly that it came up around the school house unnoticed and the pupils and teacher had to be taken out in sleighs. Many cellars in town were flooded.

Confer, carrier on rural mail route No. 1, slipped and fell, dislocating his shoulder. His son, Ward, is serving as substitute carrier until the father will be able to take up his duties.

CHARGES AGAINST SURFACE

Serious charges against State Zoologist H. A. Surface have been filed by Alfred P. Satterthwait, of Chester county, recently discharged as an assistant to the former. The charges were submitted to Secretary of Agriculture N. B. Critchfield.

The gist of the charges, which go deeply into detail, is that Surface has been systematically purchasing machinery and material with state money, which he used for his own private ends on his farm at Mechanicsburg, Cumberland county.

It is also charged that he has carried men upon the state payroll, when they were actually working for Surface personally.

Satterthwait furnished copies of the charges to newspaper men, saying he had sent the original to Critchfield by registered mail.

Surface will not discuss the charges at all, but said: "I ask my friends to withhold judgment in this matter until the whole business has been sifted. I am ready to meet these or any other charges which any one can bring."

The charges deal principally with events said to have occurred during the last two years.

Satterthwait alleges that Surface took an incubator belonging to the state from the capital to Mechanicsburg for his private use; that he bought a gasoline engine with state money for his private use, and did the same with a spraying machine and with fertilizers.

DECRIES MINIMUM PENALTY

York County Judge Says it Defeats Aims of Justice.

President Judge J. W. Bittenger, in a statement several days ago, questions the constitutionality of the new Tustin prison law and says that it has a tendency to defeat the aims of justice. He based his opinion on his experience in a recent murder trial in his court in York county.

Rather than send to the penitentiary such criminals as might escape with a minimum sentence of less than a year, he says, the York County Court will send them to jail where they are certain to spend a full year at least. The Judge says:

"The Judge is the most competent to decide the punishment: he knows the facts, which probably will not be investigated by the Board of Prison Inspectors in acting upon the case. His position is a most responsible one, and he must have the entire confidence of the community.

The evidence is not filed with the commitment, and in this case (that of Brown) it was necessary to make these remarks that the prison inspectors might be more fully informed. They were intended not so much for Brown, but for public information, and for the information of those who will have to act hereafter. It was known to the Court in this case that by reason of the failure of the jury in the case of Minnie Elmira Tracey to find a verdict commensurate with her crime, and the short indeterminate sentence passed on her by the Court, although up to the limit of the law for manslaughter, was effective in the case of Brown of preventing the jury from finding a verdict of murder of the first degree. These facts will probably not be known to the prison inspectors when they come to pass upon the question of his release under this act.

It even cannot be known who the inspectors will be at that time, and the only question they will probably determine will be whether or not Brown has made such a record as a prisoner as gives him claim to be discharged on probation. If they recommend his discharge the Board of Pardons will in all probability act upon the recommendation, and the prisoner will be discharged without adequate punishment, to prey upon the community as before his conviction, to the detriment of the peace and order of the Commonwealth.

It is the tendency of this act to increase crime. It does not require long for men or women criminally disposed to learn from such legislation the growing sentimentality and feeling in favor of prisoners; that in the lapse of time their crimes will be forgotten in the anxiety to benefit them, and that their escape from punishment will be speedy and easy, and greatly increased over the system which has existed from the foundation of the Commonwealth and the passage of the act in question.

Under the old system there existed relief for all those who deemed themselves unjustly or improperly convicted or sentenced, by appeal in the first instance to the Supreme Court, and then to the Board of Pardons and the Governor. Thus, a prisoner in any proper case could have his sentence commuted or obtain pardon, and the Courts were always ready in proper cases to recommend proper action in behalf of the prisoners to the Board of Pardons or the Governor, or at least not to interfere with the actions of these authorities.

JANUARY FLOOD

High Water Causes Much Excitement and Little Damage.

The first flood of the winter isolated Bellefonte from the rest of the world for a few hours last week. Rising at a rate that took many unawares, the water flooded the lower sections of the town. While the streams in other parts of the county were very high, the water caused little damage.

At noon on Friday, last, Spring Creek was a raging torrent and business men and others in the vicinity of the Bush House made haste to remove everything of value from their cellars. In a remarkably short time the water rose about nine feet, held that stage for a short time and then subsided almost as quickly as it had come. Heavy rains, melting the snow in the mountains, caused the trouble.

The pressrooms of "The Republican" and "Watchman" offices were flooded. The machinery in both pressrooms was submerged for several hours. By 10 o'clock on Friday night the greater part of the water was out of the pressroom of "The Republican" office. By one o'clock Tuesday morning we had all the machinery washed with fresh water, the pressroom scrubbed out and the room again heated. On Saturday the machinery was overhauled and at 4 o'clock of that afternoon our mechanical department was in full sway and operating as nicely as if floods were unknown.

Every business place between Spring Creek and the Pennsylvania Railroad station had a cellar full of water late Friday night. At the Bush House there was several feet of water in the cellar, extinguishing the fire in the heating plant, As usual in time of a heavy hood, the coal yard of E. K. Rhoads was under several feet of water. The cellars of many homes on Howard, Water and Bishop streets were flooded, in some instances causing a serious situation owing to sickness, and to overcome cases of this kind the fire engines of the town were used to pump out the water. Bishop Street resembled a small stream and the public schools were closed on Friday afternoon in the interest of the health of the pupils.

Every railroad but the Central Railroad of Pennsylvania had its troubles. The Lewisburg & Montandon road was temporarily crippled by the washing away of a part of a bridge, near Rising Springs. Passengers on the afternoon train for Bellefonte were carried to Spring Mills, where they were compelled to remain over that night. The Bellefonte Central Railroad called off all trains on Friday afternoon, as did also the Pennsylvania, no trains from Tyrone or Lock Haven getting any nearer to Bellefonte than Milesburg. The Pennsylvania tracks near the round house were under several feet of water. Traffic was resumed on Saturday and with the exception of late trains the regular schedule was followed. The cement walk along Spring Creek, near the Central Railroad of Pennsylvania station, was washed out for a stretch of about sixty feet, the water covering the road at that point to a depth of about one foot. The State road, midway between Bellefonte and Milesburg, and also the fair grounds, were under water for a period of several hours.

Unusually high water was experienced at Oak Hall and other points, but little or no damage to property was reported. Some excitement was caused by reports that the large dam at Oak Hall had given way, but these, happily, proved to be untrue.

A RUSSIAN PRISONER.

Experience of a Man Who Was Chained to a Wheelbarrow.

In writting of the Schluesselburg prison in McClure's Magazine David Soskice tells of a prisoner who was chained to a wheelbarrow:

"Schedrin had been condemned to hard labor in the convict mines of Siberia and for an attempt to escape from there had been sentenced to be chained to a heavy wheelbarrow. When the order came for his transfer from Siberia to St. Petersburg no conveyance could be found large enough to contain him, the wheelbarrow and the convoy of gendarmes. Yet, as the wheelbarrow had become a part of the prisoner, the gendarmes were afraid to leave it behind. It was therefore decided to place Schedrin with his convoy in one cart and the wheelbarrow behind in another. For several months, day and night, Schedrin and the gendarmes galloped through Siberia upon a troika (a three horsed cart or sledge), while another sped behind them upon which the wheelbarrow reposed, causing the deepest amazement among the peasants in the villages through which they passed. Upon the arrival of the prisoner in SS. Peter and Paul he was once again chained to the barrow, and only after he had been six weeks in the Schluesselburg was he finally detached from it and given freedom of movement within the narrow confines of his cell.

"'When they unchained me,' said Schedrin subsequently, 'I could not get enough movement. I wanted to run and run, and it seemed to me that I could never stop. How strange it is that men who can enjoy perfect freedom of movement never realize the wonderful happiness that is theirs.'"

HENRY CAVENDISH.

A Recluse, He Lived Far From the Madding Crowd.

Henry Cavendish, the famous natural philosopher and chemist, was a recluse who astonished England.

A son of Lord Charles Cavendish and a nephew of the third Duke of Devonshire, possessed of enormous wealth, the subject of universal admiration because of his scientific attainments, he preferred the solitude of his study and the company of his books to the pleasures society could offer him.

For many years he lived at Hampstead in a large, roomy house, attended by a number of female servants, who, however, were strictly enjoined to keep out of his sight. If a domestic by the merest chance came into the presence of Cavendish she was instantly dismissed.

Every morning the philosopher would leave a note on the hall table naming what he wanted for dinner. No one saw him place the note there; but, accustomed to the strange customs of the establishment, the meal would be prepared, and only the remains of the repast signified the presence of the master of the house.

When Cavendish died in 1810 he left behind him nearly a million pounds sterling, besides a lasting reputation as a scientist and writer on natural philosophy.—London Telegraph.

Chrysanthemums.

Chrysanthemums stand fourth in commercial importance among flowers. Only the rose, the violet and the carnation surpass them, and that chiefly because the chrysanthemum season is so short, while the others can be had from the florist nearly the whole year round. Greece gave us the name. Chrysanthemum means "golden flower." But the name was invented long before the big butter yellow globes were known in the occident. It referred to the prevailing gold in the small varieties that were known. Strangely enough, the first chrysanthemum brought into Europe was not gold, but purple. It was a small flower about two inches across, shaped like an aster. Somebody took it to Europe from China in 1790—and, presto, the modern history of chrysanthemums was begun.—Argonaut.

Why He Could Beat McGregor.

Alexander Ure, the lord advocate of Scotland, is a keen golfer, and he has a good store of golfing tales. These he is always ready to relate, even if they tell against himself.

Playing on a certain course in Scotland, he remarked incidentally to his caddie: "By the way, I played a round with Todd McGregor the last time I was here. Grand player, McGregor!"

"Aye," said the caddie, "but ye could bate McGregor the noo."

"Do you think so?" exclaimed the gratified lord advocate, being well aware of McGregor's prowess.

"Aye," drawled the caddie. "McGregor's deid."—Golfing.

How Customs Vary.

She—In some parts of Australia when a man marries each of the bride's relatives strikes him with a club by way of welcome into the family. He—Yes, and in many parts of America when a man marries each of the bride's relatives strikes him with a loan by way of welcoming him into the family.—New York Times.

The Glad Hand.

"What do you mean by the glad hand?"

"Anything," answered Mr. Bloochips, "that will beat three of a kind."—Washington Star.

A Dull Point.

Blobbs—Saphedde is always talking about his point of view. Slobbs—Yes, but unfortunately it isn't sharp enough to penetrate anything.—Philadelphia Record.

Let us watch all our beginnings, and results will manage themselves.—Clark.

Spohr and the Violin.

Louis Spohr, the greatest of all German violinists and a man whose name is otherwise indelibly written on the pages of musical history, was born at Brunswick on April 5, 1784, just fifteen days after his great contemporary and rival, Nicolo Paganini, first saw the light of the world. Two greater contrasts than these two men could not be imagined. Paganini, the brilliant, dazzling, comet-like apparition, overawed the masses, for whose favor he made a high bid, while the German, the serious, dignified, deep artist, appealed to the connoisseurs and cultured musicians. Spohr both by precept and example exerted a tremendous influence on violin playing and violin composition and, in fact, on composition in general. The greatest musicians of his day stood in awe of him, and even Richard Wagner, after Spohr had produced "The Flying Dutchman" at Cassel in 1843, where he was then conductor of the opera, in a letter written to the great violinist displayed a sense of gratitude of which in later years he seemed incapable. Spohr died at Cassel in 1859.—Argonaut.

Tit For Tat.

A newspaper man who called on a local manufacturer the other day to pay a friendly visit found the latter in no mood for friendly calls. He was in a white heat.

"What's the matter?" asked the visitor. "You don't seem pleased to see me."

"Oh, I would be pleased to see you," said the other, "if I wasn't so mighty mad at the meanest piece of petty holdup I ever saw. Here's a check from a fellow who owed me a bill for ninety days, and darned if he hasn't mailed the check at last and subtracted the 2 cents for the postage stamp that brought the letter."

"Can you beat that?" exclaimed the visitor as he eyed the check.

"I can," said the other as he reached for a telegraph blank. "I am going to wire him a receipt in full, and I'll wire it collect."—Newark Call.

Supreme Court Ways.

When the supreme court of the United States assembles at 12 o'clock on each Monday the room is filled with lawyers, clerks, newspaper men and spectators. Routine announcements are made by the chief justice in a voice no one can understand. Decisions of great moment are rendered by other justices in mumbled words which are not heard. Lawyers, clerks, newspaper men and spectators stare hard at the honorable justice who may be talking or reading, some with hands curved into a round board so that they can catch a few words if possible. But no one in the courtroom shouts "Louder!" No one would last very long if he did. And should a person be sentenced for contempt of the supreme court it would be the end. As an old colored employee once said, "Dere ain't no appeal from dis cote."—St. Louis Star.

Swallowed and Climbed.

A woman newly rich was invited to an aristocratic dinner party. During the course of fowl and salad this woman noticed with dismay a fat, furry caterpillar on her topmost leaf of lettuce. Glancing up, she met her aristocratic hostess' eye. The hostess, too, had seen the caterpillar. Her gaze implored the guest to save the dinner from catastrophe. The guest gave her hostess a reassuring smile. Then she doubled a lettuce leaf around the caterpillar and swallowed it calmly. The look of awe and gratitude that her hostess gave her was an assurance that her footing in society was at last firmly established.

"Did you think," said Mrs. Newlyrich to her daughter afterward, "that I'd lose a chance of establishing the family socially for a little thing like a caterpillar?"

Spanish Surnames.

In addition to three or four Christian names the Spanish child bears the combined family names of his father and mother. When the surnames are doubled or connected by the y, meaning "and," the first is the more important one and the only one that may be taken alone, for it is in the father's name, while the last is in the name of the mother. In Spain they know no "senior" and "junior." Father and son may bear the same Christian name, but each takes his own mother's name as a distinction, the father being, for instance, Pedro Diaz y Castillo and the son Pedro Diaz y Blanco.

O'Connell's Big Head.

Thackeray was six feet two inches in height, and Sir H. W. Lucy says the great novelist wore a seven and five-eighth inch hat, beating Dickens and John Bright by a full half inch. Mr. Gladstone's hat was of seven and three-eighth inch measurement—the same as Macaulay's—while Beaconsfield needed a full seven inch. The hat of Daniel O'Connell, however, would have beaten them all, measuring eight and one-half inches by ten inches.

Unreasonable.

She—I don't see why you should hesitate to marry on $3,000 a year. Papa says my gowns never cost more than that. He—But, my dear, we must have something to eat. She (petulantly)—Isn't that just like a man? Always thinking of his stomach.—Boston Transcript.

Why?

When a mother tells her boy he is getting to be just like his father he knows well that it is not intended as a compliment.

In Awful Shape.

"Why don't you go to work?"

"I'm so dead tired of doing nothing that I'm too tired to do anything."—Cleveland Leader.

DAD'S (PAY) DAY.

Dad must be gettin' nervous now,
Because his day is near.
It's not just like dear mother's day,
When all is love and cheer.

The women folks all pull his leg.
The kids all stand around and beg.
The girls just grab him round the neck
And holler, "Where's my Christmas check?"

It's "Dear old daddy!" "Darling Pa!"
But, oh, if he don't quickly pay
Behind his back those women jaw,
"He's gettin' tighter every day!"

Say, dad, now, how do you pull through
With everybody after you,
When every day you hear them say:
"This is your day. Now pay, pay, pay?"

But when dad puts up Christmas cash
What does he get for being rash?
Those women hunt a bargain sale
And buy him junk all worn and stale.

Cigars a Greaser wouldn't smoke,
Suspenders always going broke,
While to outsiders go the best,
Bought by the cash from poor dad's chest.

Hist, dad! Your day is comin' nigh.
You better hang your pants up high.
Those women folks are round to spy.
They'll steal your wallet on the sly.

OUR SHOW BIRD DRYING MACHINE.

Who can blame that fancier's wife for knocking when he blocks her tidy kitchen with show coops in which washed roosters are hung up to dry?

Hardly think a judge would with hold a divorce if he saw those roosters scratching sawdust on to the floor or was awakened in the morning at 4 by those kitchen crowers disturbing his snore.

Now, to prevent family jars and to make it easy for showmen to dry their birds evenly and quickly we present a picture of our drying machine. A dry goods or piano box may be easily converted into this convenience.

Place door in back to admit stove ventilators below in front, register in floor in back of drying room, ventilator in top and a drop curtain.

Use a smokeless heater, regulate temperature by wick and thermometer and don't forget that too fast drying makes a rooster look like a red headed white chrysanthemum.

FEATHERS AND EGGSHELLS

When a Pennsylvania association in the coal region offers a forty-five dollar prize for the best sparring Game and only a twenty-five dollar cup for the best display of Wyandottes and that cup to be won twice, they certainly do not show themselves true fanciers.

After all the arguments were presented to the American Poultry association for the admission of Games, it was discovered that the variety was the regular Pit Game. The assembly at once gave the Game rooster a solar plexus knockout.

The Bantam as a layer is a wonder. Quite a number of people in the cities, where yards are small, keep these dainty birds for layers and find they pay well.

The north pole having been discovered, it remains to be seen which breed of roosters will be the first to crow from the top of the earth. How about the snowy crested Silver Polish?

Your turkeys will appreciate the waste apples. If you're rich enough to feed small potatoes to the chickens, serve them raw. It's less trouble and they relish them better.

A farmer who kept Barred Rocks went through a White Leghorn plant and counted ninety hens on the nests. He at once traded off the Rocks and stocked up with Leghorns. In a month the Leghorns had knocked off laying and the Rocks were laying to beat the band. Then the farmer saw what many won't see—that a man must be behind the hen to make her cackle in the pen. Strain, grain, brains and pains bring gains.

When a hen dies, bury her at once. If thrown into the field, your neighbor's dog may drag it home, his fowls may pick at the carcass, get the disease and die and you'll have another sin to answer for by and by.

The great cattle ranges of the west are rapidly disappearing, and that's what makes beef so high, but the long horn steer is being supplanted by the long tailed turkey and the White Leghorns that lay and fly.

Think of 1,000 poultry shows! That's the figure the exhibitions this year will reach. And then think of the sports who bragged they'd clean up the show who'll be licked and hear wife say, "I told you so!"

Many people are knocking because their hens are not laying. They forget they must fill up the hen's bread basket before she will fill up their egg basket.

The drafty knotholes in the hencoop are the leaks through which the profit goes.

The Indiana legislature recently appropriated $5,000 and the Missouri house made a biannual grant of $10,000 for poultry investigation.

A Receipt for Corned-Beef Hash.

A corned-beef hash may be made to look, as well as taste, quite out of the ordinary. Remove skin, gristle and most of the fat from cooked corned beef, then chop. The best cuts of corned beef are known as the Rattle Rand and Fancy Brisket. To one and one half cupfuls of chopped meat add two cupfuls of chopped cold boiled potatoes. Season with salt and pepper, add two tablespoonfuls of butter, one and one half tablespoonfuls of chopped green pepper and moisten with milk (the amount must depend upon the moisture in the potatoes). Turn into a hot buttered frying-pan and stir until well mixed; spread evenly, then place on a part of the range where it may slowly brown underneath. Turn and fold like an omelet on a hot platter, garnish with rings cut from a red or green pepper and sprigs of parsley.

Another variation from the ordinary hash is known as a vegetable hash. The same quantity of potato is used as of meat and one half the quantity of chopped cooked beets.—Fannie Merritt Farmer in Woman's Home Companion for January.

"Mme. Chapellier?"

"Yes."

"His excellency has directed me to admit you as soon as you called."

The attendant led the way to the private office of the minister of foreign affairs, opened the door and announced:

"Mme. Chapellier!"

"The government," said the minister, "appreciating your past services, is desirous of adding to the amounts already paid you another 50,000 francs."

"And I doubt not the government expects me to add to my past services a corresponding amount."

"Can you leave for London tonight?"

"I can go anywhere at any time."

"Very well. I will explain."

The minister cast a look about the room, habitual with him before entering upon a matter involving secrecy, leaned forward in his chair and spoke in a low tone.

"The British government has made a treaty with the ambassador of the sublime porte at London by which the sultan grants valuable concessions to Great Britain. We have been negotiating with the sultan's ambassador here in Paris for these same privileges, but we are too late.

"Sir Bradford Chichester, one of the younger members of the British diplomatic corps, has engaged passage by sea for Constantinople in a ship sailing on the 14th. He will carry with him the British-Turkish treaty for signature at the Turkish foreign office. It is our purpose to delay him either at starting or on the way."

Mme. Chapellier reached London the next morning and reported in person to Baron la Brun, the French minister.

"In order to assist you," he said, "I give a dinner this evening at which Sir Bradford Chichester will be present. Have you costumes?"

"Everything except appropriate jewels. I shall personate a wealthy American widow—Mrs. Worthington Wood."

"Where shall I send them?"

"No. — Portman square."

"Very well. I shall expect you at 8."

At the dinner given at the French embassy Mrs. Worthington Wood, who, though born of French parents, had lived the first fifteen years of her life in America, was taken in to dinner by Sir Bradford Chichester. She knew that his family, though ancient, were not rich and that he would gladly take a wealthy wife. She manifested so much interest in seeing his country seat, the Dunes, on the Irish channel and some 200 miles from London, that he, thinking to benefit in the matter of a courtship—should he deem such desirable—arranged a house party to go there to remain till the 13th, when he must return to the city to be ready to sail on the 14th. Of course Mrs. Wood was invited.

The next day a small number of guests assembled at the Dunes. It was winter, but the house was cheerfully lighted and logs blazed on every hearth. Sir Bradford devoted himself to the young widow. There are women who possess the knack of carrying an impressible man quickly off his feet. Such was Mrs. Worthington Wood. She administered, so to speak, a love potion. There was in it a reason—to cause her victim to feel that he could never aspire to possess her. Eyes that shot a spark to kindle passion, feigned innocence to excite reverence.

Sir Bradford, Mrs. Wood and several others of the house party had gone up from London on the same train and in the same compartment. Mrs. Wood noticed that her host carried a leather hand bag that he never lost sight of. If he left the train for a moment at a station he took the bag with him; if he went into the smoking compartment to enjoy a cigar the hand bag went with him.

Mrs. Wood also noticed that when he entered the family equipage to be driven to his home, while he gave up his rugs, umbrella and other such belongings to the servants, he held on to the satchel. She deemed it necessary to her plans to know where the hand bag would be deposited. But as soon as the host entered the house, leaving his guests to be shown to their rooms by the housekeeper, he disappeared. When Mrs. Wood next saw him the satchel was not with him.

"I have brought with me," she said to him, "a few of my finest jewels, not daring to leave them in London. Have you a safe in the house?"

"Certainly," he said. "One moment. I will call the housekeeper. The safe is in my bedroom. She will go with us."

"Us? Is it necessary for you to go?"

"I never allow my safe to be opened except by myself."

"On second thought, I will keep my valuables locked in my trunk."

There was a faint reproach in the glance she gave him and her tone.

"Pardon me," he said. "I would trust you, but my housekeeper"—

"You would not trust?"

"Certainly, I would trust you both, but there is property in that safe that doesn't belong to me. Would I be justified in permitting any one, however trustworthy, to go in there?"

His tone was growing more decided. Interests of state were asserting themselves.

"You would be a fool to do so. Here is my box. I intrust it to your care."

A temptation came to him not to be outdone in a matter of confidence, but he resisted it. Taking the box, in which there were only a few gems for informal occasions, he went away and placed it in his safe.

The next evening at dinner the young widow was entrancing. She seemed to be in a light, happy mood. She told the story of how the host had refused to permit her to visit his safe without his being present and set all the guests laughing by its humorous telling. The host laughed with the rest, and had he not been coming under a spell that would have ended the matter. As it was he winced. There was underneath Mrs. Wood's humor a faint suspicion of ridicule. He tried to excuse himself, but only got tangled in his own excuses.

"Don't you think," said the lady to the others, "that Sir Bradford owes me some reparation?"

All banteringly agreed that he did.

"Well, this is the last night of our visit here. Let him intrust me with the key of his safe till tomorrow morning."

All declared that such an act would not necessarily be showing any confidence whatever. But the widow insisted that it would satisfy her, and she smilingly held out her hand for the key.

The thought flashed through Sir Bradford's head that the safe, being in his own room, would be under his control through the night. There was a pretty woman smiling at him, daring him—a woman with whom he was fascinated and whom he thought it advantageous to marry. Nevertheless he did not consent. Then suddenly there came a flash from the woman's eyes, a haughty look as if she deemed such a denial of confidence insulting. Sir Bradford put his hand in his pocket and tossed the key on the table before her.

Amid a burst of laughter she seized it and placed it in her corsage.

The diplomat had no sooner yielded to an impulse than he regretted his act. A man under a woman's spell is liable to rush from one extreme to another. One moment he trusts her implicitly; the next he fears that he has fallen into the toils of a devil. At any rate, such was the fear of Sir Bradford. Never for a moment during the evening did he leave the side of the woman who possessed the key of his safe—the safe where was deposited that which if it passed into the possession of another would ruin him. If he turned away from her for a moment it was that she should not see the expression on his face when he cursed himself for a fool.

The widow rallied him continually. "Aren't you going to give me one moment alone?" "Be comforted! I am not in the habit of visiting any but my own room when I visit." "Will you sleep with a revolver under your pillow tonight?" These were some of the banterings she gave him, much to the amusement of the guests. At midnight, when the party broke up, she had made no move. She rose with the others and went up to her room.

The moment Sir Bradford heard her door close he went up to his own apartment. With his eyes fixed on his safe he gave himself up to tumultuous musing. It contained his possible ruin, and the key was in the possession of a woman he had known but a few days.

"Pooh, pooh! What an ass! She only did it to bedevil me. Nonsense! I have a revolver under my pillow, and if any one should come in here tonight— More nonsense! Who's to come?" Thus he tried to dismiss the matter from his mind. But, oh, if he only had the key!

He went to bed and tried to sleep. Slumber would not come. Fancying he heard a movement in his room, he arose and struck a light. He was ashamed of himself for doing so, but left it burning. This made him feel a trifle more comfortable, and toward morning he went to sleep.

He was awakened by his valet bringing hot water. After a glance at the safe, which showed no evidence of having been tampered with, he arose, dressed and went down to breakfast. A maid approached him and said:

"I took the hot water to Mrs. Wood, room 6. She didn't answer when I knocked, and I went in. She isn't there."

Sir Bradford blanched. Like lightning the thought flashed through his brain that the key of his safe had gone with her. Then he saw that he was ruined. He was to sail that afternoon for Constantinople. The only way to get the treaty was to break into his safe. But it was a new and perfect one, put in since he had entered the diplomatic service. Only in London could men be found of sufficient skill to do the work, and London was 200 miles away. He put his hand to his head, staggered up to his room and locked himself in.

* * * * * * *

Twenty-four hours later the minister of foreign affairs in Paris received the card of Mme. Chapellier. He directed that she be at once admitted.

"Well?" he said.

"I left the diplomat at his home far from London with the treaty locked in his safe. There is the key."

"And how much time do you think we will gain?"

She handed him an item cut from a newspaper stating that Sir Bradford Chichester had sent to London for men to open his safe; that they had failed and others more skillful had gone up. He had offered the latter £1,000 if they would do the job in three hours."

"That will do," said the minister. "Our treaty is on the way."

He drew her a check for 50,000 francs.

HOW LONG IS A DAY?

Some of the World's Inhabitants Eat 315 Meals During One.

If we should meet a man and he should casually remark that he ate 315 meals yesterday we would doubtless be somewhat astonished at his appetite. Likewise we would feel sorry for the man who said that, having foolishly eaten three eggs with bacon for breakfast, he had no appetite for his Christmas dinner. But maybe the first man was from Spitzbergen, where they have a day three and a half months in length, whereas the poor chap who missed the Christmas feast lived in Finland, at Torena, where Christmas day is something less than three hours long.

On the whole, it would be rather wise if one should undertake to do certain work, to receive so much per day in payment, to understand just where the work is to be done, else one might have to labor eighteen and a half hours at Stockholm, if it happened to be the longest day of the year, or all the time from May 21 to July 22 if at Wardbury, in Norway. In St. Petersburg the longest day is nineteen hours and the shortest five hours. At Torena, Finland, there is a twenty-two hour day. At London and Bremen the longest day is sixteen and a half hours, while at Hamburg and Dantzig there are seventeen hours in the longest day. In Washington the longest day is about fifteen hours.—Exchange.

HIS CONUNDRUM.

Propounded In Prose, It Was Answered In Rhyme.

In the olden time before the war, the days so famous for generous hospitality in the south, a brilliant party was assembled at dinner in a beautiful country homestead. Across the table wit flashed back and forth, and the guests began to vie with one another in proposing conundrums.

Mr. Alexander H. Stephens offered one which puzzled the whole company, "What is it that we eat at breakfast and drink at dinner?"

For some time no answer came, and the bright eyes of the southern orator began to sparkle with triumph, when Colonel Johnson, taking up the "Commonplace Book" of the hostess, which lay conveniently by, wrote impromptu upon the flyleaf the following answer:

What is eaten for breakfast and drunken for dinner?
Is it coffee or eggs or butter or meats?
Sure double the stomach of obdurate sinner
Who eats what he drinks and drinks what he eats.

But let us consider. 'Tis surely not butter
Nor coffee nor meats, whether broiled or roast,
Nor boiled eggs nor poached nor fried in a batter
It must, then, be bread. Ah, yes—when 'tis toast!

—Atlanta Constitution.

Blackburn's Eloquence.

The story is told of Senator Proctor of Vermont in reminiscences by Vice President Stevenson that when invited to go out of the senate chamber just before the day's session began he replied: "Excuse me. I am paired with Blackburn on prayers." When the Rev. Dr. Butler retired from the chaplaincy of the senate Blackburn's speech surpassed all others for ardor and felicity of expression. "The counterpart of the scene that followed his closing words had never been witnessed in legislative assembly. All were in tears. It was even said that venerable senators who had never shed a tear since the ratification of the treaty of Ghent actually sobbed aloud and refused to be comforted. At length, amid silence that could be felt, an adjournment was effected, and the senators passed out to their homes. As he passed the chair Senator Vest in an undertone remarked to the vice president, 'Joe never saw him.'"—Washington Herald.

A Pot Walloper.

The parliamentary register for 1896 showed that there was then only one pot walloper in all England. One seeing the term for the first time might easily imagine that a pot walloper was a species of ichthyosaurus or some other reptile of a past age. It will be discovered upon inquiry, however, that the term "pot walloper" is literally one who boils a pot and was applied to voters in certain boroughs of England where before the passage of the reform bill of 1832 the qualifications for suffrage was to have boiled (walloped) his own pot in the parish for six months.—London Notes and Queries.

Wonderful Musical Memory.

Sir John Stainer had a wonderful musical memory. It was put to the test once at the Crystal palace when he had to play the organ in the "Messiah" and a folio copy, on which alone he could see the score, was not forthcoming. The conductor was in despair. Sir John cut the knot by a wonderful tour de force, playing the part faultlessly right through and entirely from memory, probably the only time the "Messiah" has been so rendered.—London Standard.

Woman's World

SHE GETS NOBEL PRIZE.

Selma Lagerlof, the Popular Swedish Writer, Is Honored This Year.

Miss Selma Lagerlof, the Swedish writer, best known in this country for her stories "The Wonderful Adventures of Nils" and the "Christ Legends," has been awarded the $40,000 Nobel prize for literature—another triumph for the new woman, since this is the first time a member of the feminine sex has been so honored. Miss Lagerlof has a pleasant habit of taking prizes for literary work. Two years ago the University of Upsala gave her the degree of doctor of literature, and the laurel wreath was placed upon her brow in the cathedral, where she stood directly beneath the tablet of Linnaeus, father of botany. Then on another occasion she won a literary prize of a large sum of money from a magazine.

Miss Lagerlof is a pretty little woman with fair hair and expressive blue eyes and a gentle, unassuming manner. She was thirty years old before she began to write. Her father, who is not now living, was an army officer, and her mother's brother, Christian Wallruth, is a celebrated landscape painter. Miss Lagerlof is a graduate of the Teachers' college, Stockholm, and was for a few years a teacher. Her "Adventures of Nils" has been adopted as a text book by the National Teachers' association of her native country and is now in use in the folk schools of Sweden.

Miss Lagerlof is a suffragist and a member of the Fredrika Bremer association, a powerful woman's club for social betterment and the enfranchisement of women. While as a writer she is an idealist and an optimist, she does not in her stories deal with practical subjects in a practical manner. She depicts life as it is, but her sentiment is always uplifting. Her work has revolutionized Swedish literature. To her translator, Mrs. Velma Swanstrom Howard, a Swede by birth and an American by adoption, Miss Lagerlof owes much of her popularity in this country. Mrs. Howard has put into beautiful English the thoughts of this celebrated Swedish author.

Does Woman Eat?

Isn't that an idiotic question?

Else how does she maintain her being?

Three generations ago refined charmers were not supposed to eat.

Some of them kept up their looks by gorging on the sly.

The honest ones faded away in the approved old time way.

They paid a high price for appearing to be different from ordinary masculine clay.

Sad to relate, many continue to be influenced by that barbarous idea of "the good old times."

Youths and husbands, whether from heredity or avarice, can't help being interested in fair ones who have no appetite.

Indeed, many a man can't quite believe in the virtue of a woman under forty-five who knows a good dinner when she eats it and really enjoys it.

Miss Gude a Hopeful Suffragist.

Miss Sigrid Gude, daughter of the Norwegian minister to Washington, is an ardent suffragist. She has spent many years in England, where she was educated, and she is in active sympathy with the fight of the Englishwomen for the franchise. She believes women in this country and throughout Europe will be voting within a few years and is proud of the fact that equal suffrage got its practical start in the old world in the Scandinavian peninsula and Finland. Miss Gude will not side openly with the suffragists in this country by reason of the diplomatic post filled by her father. She intends, however, to keep close watch on the movement. She is a clever musician, and, as she speaks English as fluently as her native tongue, she will find herself at home in Washington society.

Choose a Sunny House.

When changing houses, if you happen to have to choose between two houses on opposite sides of the street, choose the one on the sunny side.

Sunshine is one of the best health bringers known and where there is a family of children may be the means of saving many doctors' bills. Rooms that get little or no sunshine are never as healthy as those that are flooded with it at some time during the day.

New Idea For Obtaining Sleep.

In Sweden it is usual in a case where a person cannot get to sleep to wring a cloth out in ice cold water and lay it across the eyes. It is said to act in some cases like a charm.

Breaking the Fast In Ramazan.

The Arabs say Ramadan; the Persians and Turks say Ramazan. They all observe throughout the month a species of fast that has no precise counterpart in the west. So long as the sun is in the sky food or drink of any kind may not pass the true believer's lips. He is not even allowed the sweet solace of a cigarette. But from the firing of the sunset guns until it is light enough to distinguish a black hair from a white he may feast to surfeiting. Watchmen will patrol the streets with drums to warn him that his moments of grace are numbered, and cannon once more announce their end.

Nothing is more characteristic of late afternoons in Ramazan than the preparations for the evening meal which preoccupy all Moslems, particularly those who work with their hands. As the sun nears the horizon fires are lighted, tables are spread, bread is broken, water is poured out, cigarettes are rolled, and hands are lifted halfway to the mouth in expectation of the signal that gives liberty to eat. This breaking of the daytime fast is called iftar and is an institution in itself. To be invited to iftar is a particular mark of friendship.—Scribner's Magazine.

Skeleton In the Closet.

The original of the singular saying "A skeleton in the closet," which is found in almost every language in Europe, is found in one of those curious collections of stories that have come down from the middle ages. In one of these collections, compiled by an unknown hand about the middle of the tenth century, there is a story of a wealthy lady who, having a secret grief, confided it to a friend who was apparently a perfectly happy woman. She was the wife of a nobleman who lived in his castle in the south of France. She and her husband were outwardly on the most loving terms. Not a care cloud seemed to cast a shadow on her path.

After hearing the story of her afflicted friend the noble lady took her by the hand and led her to a secret chamber adjoining her bedroom, there opened the door of a closet and exposed a skeleton. "Know, my friend," she said, "no one is happy. Every day I am forced by my husband to kiss this grinning death head, which is that of a gentleman who was my husband's rival and whom I would have married had not my parents willed otherwise."

The End of the Ride.

Coming out of one of the large department stores two well dressed women saw a group of street urchins gazing at their automobile, and one little girl was heard to say, "Wish I could have a ride in it." The women smiled, and then the child was asked if she would really like a ride and was helped into the machine after assuring the women that she would not be missed at home. Her companions set up a cheer as the machine started, and some of them were still on the spot when it returned half an hour later, bringing back the little girl. The women congratulated themselves on having given the little one an extraordinary treat, but were disenchanted when she told them that her father was a chauffeur and that she liked his machine "a great deal better."—New York Tribune.

Blind Justice.

We meet our philosophical friend and observe that he is smiling contentedly.

"What has gone wrong now?" we ask.

"Nothing has gone wrong," he explains. "Something went right. Spriggans owed Hennett $10,000 and put his property in his wife's name so that Hennett couldn't collect."

"But that isn't anything unusual."

"And last night Mrs. Spriggans eloped with Hennett!"—Life.

WAYS OF EMPEROR PENGUIN

Breeds in Midwinter and Carries Its One Egg on its Feet.

Visitors to the Aucland Museum now have the opportunity of inspecting an interesting memento of the recent ant-arctic expedition, presented by Lieutentant Shackleton, in the shape of a specimen of the emperor penguin, the largest and finest and in fact the most interesting of all known penguins. It was obtained at Cape Royds, at the base of Mount Erebus, and has been kindly forwarded to the museum by Professor David, of Sydney, at the express request of Lieutenant Shackleton. Considering the circumstances under which the specimen was obtained and preserved, it is in good condition, and has been excellently mounted by Mr. Griffin. The emperor penguin is absolutely confined to the shores of the ice-covered lands within the antarctic circle, and is remarkable for breeding during the middle of winter, when the sun is below the horizon, and when the temperature often falls to 50 degrees below zero. Only one egg is laid, which is supported in the closely placed broad flat feet and partly concealed in a kind of pocket in the dense coating of feathers on the lower part of the body, the bird standing bolt upright on the ice-covered ground. If disturbed, the penguin moves away with a succession of hops and jumps still keeping the egg on its feet. The young bird is fed by the parent until it is old enough to swim, when it is led to the sea and left to find its food for itself.—Auckland News.

London Cellar Restaurants.

Before coffee stalls were instituted the humblest places of refreshment were cellars, where the hard up, as the slang phrase went, could "dive for a dinner," with a choice of such viands as tripe, cow beel, sausages and shin of beef soup. Some of the cellar restaurants existed as recently as the early seventies of the last century in Butcher row, Temple Bar and the network of courts and alleys swept away for the site of the royal courts of justice. It was in this neighborhood and probably to a dining place of this description that Dr. Johnson resorted in his struggling days, when he was so poor that, as he relates, it was not every day that he could afford a halfpenny tip for the waiter.—London Chronicle.

Tyrone's basketball season came to a sudden end this week. Al. S. Garman, formerly of Bellefonte, who was manager of the team, issued a statement announcing that the team had disbanded and explaining the cause. This, it seems, was that the company owning the building in which the games were played, refused a flat rate per night but insisted on a percentage of receipts early in the season and when large crowds were in attendance. When the attendance fell off the owners demanded a flat rate per night for the use of the building. Manager Garman couldn't see justice or profits in the proposition, so he disbanded the team.

While driving his broncho on Allegheny Street, in front of Joseph L. Montgomery's residence, the animal decided to do a few fancy stunts in high kicking. In a few seconds the cutter was kicked to kindlingwood and Edward was sprawling about in the snow. When the broncho got tired kicking it stopped and calmly looked Edward over as the latter was taking inventory of his injuries. Considering the rapidity and vigor of the broncho's heel movements it is a wonder Edward escaped alive. He managed to come out of it with a badly sprained arm and a few other painful bruises.

Mrs. Henry H. Montgomery met with quite a painful accident on Saturday last. While in the bathroom of her home she fell against the tub and fractured two ribs.

The many friends of Milton R. Johnson were glad to learn that the operation on his eyes, at a Philadelphia hospital, proved to be quite successful and that he hopes to be able to return home before the end of the present week.

Mr. and Mrs. Harvey Lingle, of Philipsburg, have located in West Virginia, where the former has secured a position. Mrs. Lingle will be remembered by her many friends as Miss Mame McClain, of Bellefonte.

Professor J. Angel, the eye specialist, has an interesting advertisement in another column. Those desiring the benefit of his services will do well to examine his advertisement and thus be sure of the time of his visit to Bellefonte.

Miss Catherine McGowan, who was confined to her home for several days with an attack of tonsilitis, has recovered sufficently to return to her duties as chief operator for the American Union Telephone Company.

Charles Rockey, one of the efficient corps of clerks at Joseph Bros' store, has been ill for several days with the grip but is improving at present and hopes to soon recover the strength which disappeared so suddenly when he went down with that unwelcome disease.

Carroll Sleppy, a student at the Bellefonte Academy, was admitted to the hospital several days ago for treatment for pneumonia. His father, Rev. Mr. Sleppy, of Freedom, Pa., and also his mother and sister and a brother, Dr. Ray Sleppy, are with him. At the hospital it was reported that the young man was doing very nicely.

Everybody who knows "Davy" Kochler, and pretty nearly everybody in Centre County knows him, will be sorry to learn that on Monday evening he fell down a stairway at Shuey's grocery store and sustained painful injuries about the head and neck. He was removed to the Ammerman home, where his injuries were dressed, and is now getting along as well as could be expected.

William T. Kelley, general freight agent of the Pennsylvania Railroad, is sending out copies of the pamphlet "Alfalfa" to farmers throughout Centre County: The pamphlet is handy and valuable, showing the benefits to be derived from growing alfalfa on the farm. He is also sending out another pamphlet discussing the benefits resulting from the use of lime on farm land. The two pamphlets were edited by the School of Agriculture and Experiment Station, at State College, and are being distributed by the Pennsylvania Railroad to farm owners in all parts of the State.

That was a fine tribute paid William H. Musser when the Republicans of the North ward renominated him without opposition for Justice of the Peace and the Democrats put up no rival candidate for the place. As a consequence Mr. Musser will be able to sit back on election night and not worry himself a bit as the returns come in. This is a most enviable position for a candidate. However, Mr. Musser has proved to be such an efficient and obliging official that pretty nearly everybody wants to see him have another term, and to make sure of this he was given no opposition. Mr. Musser was a good soldier and he maintains his record by being a good citizen and also a good Justice of the Peace.

DEDICATION OF CHURCH

Interesting Services at New Deciple Church, at Philipsburg.

Philipsburg's new $26,000 Disciple Church building was dedicated on Sunday. Several services were held, conducted by General Z. T. Sweeney, of Columbus, former minister to Turkey. Others to deliver addresses were Judge Ellis L. Orvis, of Bellefonte, and ministers of the several churches in Philipsburg.

The music was under the direction of Miss Gwendolyn M. Dunwiddie, with Webster T. Bair as choirster. The organists were the Misses Mary E. Fryberger and Henrietta Wilson.

The corner stone of the temple was laid on July 24, 1909, and the completed structure cost $26,000. The main auditorium has five entrances direct from the streets, and is connected with the Sunday school room by folding doors, which makes it possible to enlarge the auditorium so that 1000 people can easily be seated.

Two large stained glass memorial windows add beauty to both the interior and exterior of the auditorium. The Sunday school room is in five wings or apartments, making it conveient to divide the pupils into classes. On this floor are also the library, secretary's room, choir room, robing rooms and pastor's study.

Less than four years ago the Church of Christ congregation consisted of six people. They arranged with W. S. Buchanan, an evangelist, to hold a series of revival meetings in a public hall, and as a result of the meetings 175 members were enrolled.

D. F. Harris, of Montpelier, Ind., was the first pastor, and during his stay 161 new members were enrolled. Evangelist Buchanan was chosen minister in October, 1908, and during his pastorate the new temple was planned and begun, and its completion assured. The Rev. H. A. Dudley is the present pastor. The members now number about 400.

The building committee is composed of Dr. J. W. Dunwiddie, one of the six founders, and H. M. Davidson B. F. Palmer, H. F. Faulkner and L. G. Runk. Members of the finance committee are: C. E. Griest, T. M. Sunderland, M. E. Davis, H. M. Davidson and L. G. Runk.

MRS. THOMAS GLENN.

The many friends of Mrs. Thomas Glenn were shocked to learn of her death early Saturday morning, last, at the Bellefonte Hospital. So few knew that she was ill that they could hardly credit the news. "Buster Brown."

With the "Buster Brown" Company, which comes to Garmans Opera House tomorrow night, we are promised, among other improvements in the cast, the best animal impersonator who has ever essayed to play the difficult part of "Tige," Buster's faithful canine companion. Jack Bell, certainly knows dogs. His reconstruction of Tige's quizzical countenance is a masterpiece in paint, papier-mache and canvas. Ferocity, amiability, curiosity, even that peculiar, subtle and illusive "doggish" emotion, called humor, is fitted clearly and easily across this canine mask. He wags his tail, licks his chops, tracks footprints with tremendous energy and just plays dog. There are a great many people in the audience who wait to see him assume his expression of pleasant pre-occupation which is peculiar to the dog, when he stretches out his neck and crooks his hind leg or left ear. Buster Brown is said to be all new since last season and has a company numbering over forty. The specialties and musical numbers are said to be all new, while the scenery and costumes are said to be a pleasant surprise. No doubt "Buster" will enjoy his usual big audience here, and those who attend will enjoy the performance.

SAN JOSE SCALE

State Inspector Reports Little Found in Centre County.

In the most recent bulletin issued by State Zoologist H. A. Surface, at Harrisburg, reports are presented showing the results of orchard inspection in the several counties of Pennsylvania. T. C. Foster, inspector for Centre, Perry, Snyder and Union, makes the following report in regard to Centre county:

"Centre county, where the work of inspection is at present receiving attention, is not so very seriously affected by the ravages of the San Jose scale, except in the case of Rebersburg and vicinity. Up to this time inspections have been made in only five townships, and the results show about 20 per cent. of the orchards to be infested with San Jose scale, and about 5 per tent. of the trees, on an average. The interest is growing in favor of the organization of a County Horticultural Association, which will probably take place some time this month. (Completed nicely, Nov. 20th.—H. A. S.)

"The abandonment of the work which has been in progress for the past four years would doubtless prove a disadvantage to many fruit growers who have not yet been reached. The establishment of more demonstration orchards in each county where the fruit-growing interests are of sufficient importance to warrant it, would be a move in the right direction; but some modification should be made of the present arrangement of number of orchards for each Demonstrator to care for, so as to permit thorough work.

"The press of the counties in my district deserve a vote of thanks for generosity in the publication of the required notices, etc., sent to editors. (It must be remembered that this office requires each inspector to keep the public informed, through announcements in the local press, as to just where he is working each week, so he can be consulted.—H. A. S.")

A Valuable Booklet.

One of the most valuable booklets that has ever come to our notice is being issued for free distribution by the Waverly Oil Works Co., of Pittsburg, Pa. This booklet contains 100 pages, and in addition to telling about oils of every kind, it has about 70 pages devoted to tables and matters of general information, much of which is entirely new. It is of considerable value to engineers and mechanics, and one of these booklets should be on the desk of every business man. A postal card request addressed to the Waverly Oil Works Co., at Pittsburgh, Pa., will bring one of the books promptly.

PROF. J. ANGEL.

Eyesight Specialist.

TO MY PATRONS: Having become established in Centre and adjoining counties as a successful eye specialist I have concluded that it will be to the best interest of myself and to the public to make a reduction of 25 percent, in all my charges. This will enable those who have felt they could not afford to pay former prices to secure proper treatment of their eyes at the lowest possible expense.

If you wish to save your eyesight and money, too, don't fail to call on Prof. Angel. All parents are advised to have their children's eyes examined, especially those who go to school.
